Department of English – Educational Trip to Wayanadu

The Department of English along with other humanities departments organized an educational trip to Wayanadu, bringing classroom learning into direct contact with nature. The lush green mountains, dense forests, and magnificent waterfalls provided students with a living experience of the Romantic spirit in literature.

Standing before the mist-covered hills, students reflected on how the Romantic poets believed that nature is the greatest teacher and source of inspiration. The serene landscapes, flowing waters, and vibrant greenery echoed the idea that nature nurtures imagination, emotional depth, and inner peace.

The visit to the waterfalls and forest pathways allowed students to experience the beauty, power, and tranquility of the natural world firsthand. Just as Romantic poets celebrated nature as a moral and spiritual guide, students witnessed how nature refreshes the mind and uplifts the soul.

This trip was not merely recreational but educational—connecting literary theory with lived experience and reinforcing the belief that nature remains the finest source of creativity and wisdom.
